What Is Character

Isn't it strange? We are now having to define what we mean by character. When I was a kid, I would often hear in the family, "Character is doing what is right! Character is what you are after everyone has left the room. Character is telling the truth. Character is standing up for the things that are right and always opposing the wrong." So let's get some things straight.

What Character Is Not

- Character is not what a person professes to be; it is what a person IS.
- Character is not reputation.
- Character is not a well-known event in someone's life.
- Character is not being a well-gifted person.
- Character is not keeping company with the right people.
- Character is not having thoughts of goodness.
- Character is not projections about tomorrow.
- Character is not rhetoric.

What Character Is

- Character is the quality that reflects moral beliefs/values, which motivates our behavior, choices, or attitudes, and which helps us distinguish between right and wrong (Josephson Institute of Ethics).
- Character is moral strength.
- Character is doing the right things for the right reasons.
- Character is knowing the difference between right and wrong.
- Character is always doing the right thing even if no one is looking.
- Character is loving the good and following through with the appropriate behavior.
- Character is knowing the good.
- Character is doing the good.
